Siemens opened the Crystal in 2012 as a global hub for debate on sustainable living and development. Since opening, over 100,000 people each year have visited the interactive exhibition; and thousands of meetings and events have been hosted in our sustainable events venue.

The Crystal sets the benchmark for sustainable building design. It is the only building in the world to achieve the highest certification in both the BREEAM and LEED schemes, as well as many other accreditations. Siemens technologies throughout the building ensure the highest energy efficiency and CO_2 standards are met.[2]

Getting around with public transport (Tube, DLR, Overground, bus)

The cheapest way to get around London by public transport is using an Oyster smart card. You can get an Oyster card for a £5 deposit at all Tube (underground), London Overground and TfL Rail stations, City Airport DLR station and at Visitors Centres (e.g. at Heathrow Airport and Gatwick Airport). You will need to upload money onto the Oyster card. £10 should be sufficient for four journeys within central London (zone 1-2).

How to use a contactless debit/credit card or Oyster card on Tube, DLR and Overground:

- Touch your contactless or Oyster card on a yellow card reader to start a journey. A fare will be deducted.
- At the end of your journey, touch out with the same card on a yellow card reader - doing this means you'll be charged the correct fare.

How to use a contactless debit/credit card or Oyster card on the bus:

- Just touch your contactless or Oyster card on a yellow card reader at the start of your journey. Don't touch out when you get off!
- If you make another bus or tram journey within an hour of touching in on a bus or tram, your second journey will be free.
